The sound space sculptures by Austrian artist Bernhard Leitner augment our sensory perception. Since the late 1960s, the sound artist and architect has been reimagining the relationships between sound, space, and the human body, and amazes audiences with his precise installations. Leitner explores the artistic and sculptural qualities of sound with spaces that unfold acoustically – synaesthetic worlds of experience. The Sound Cube, a 16-channel sound architecture, is an innovation of his earlier Sound Cubes – a spruce wood cube constructed by Leitner, which facilitates a holistic experience of subtly orchestrated soundscapes. Acoustic movements flow through the bodies of observers and chart the dimensions of the space in an usual way. Hearing becomes haptic; the space begins to pulsate
